“FREAKONOMICS” BLOG

From 2008-2014 was a contributor to the “Freakonomics” blog, first when it was part of the New York Times’ website and continuing on when Freakonomics became an independent site. Published 78 articles (most about 50 percent longer than a typical op-ed) for the Times, and wrote 25 more after Freakonomics migrated. Had very broad latitude to write on any topic related to transportation and urbanization. Topics included:

- Federal transportation legislation

- Oil, fuel economy, and electric cars
- Gender and travel
- Alcohol and driving
- The future of automobility worldwide
- High-speed rail
- Cities and walkability
- Taxing and pricing the auto
- Travel behavior, VMT, and the travel time budget
- Fuel subsidies in the developing world
- Autonomous vehicles
- Transit and the environment
- Public participation in the transportation planning process

Selected articles are available at <http://www.freakonomics.com/author/ericmorris/>.
