Teaching:[selected] Courses Taught

- (Fall 2014) HP 8020/HSPV 802 Preserving Modernism: Students develop a foundation of knowledge of theory and practice of the preservation of mid nineteenth century modern buildings through readings, discussion, case studies and site visits then apply these and documentation and interpretation skills to analyze a preservation project on Clemson's campus.
- (Fall 2012, 2013, 2014, 2015, 2016, 2017, 2018, 2019, 2020, 2021, 2022) HP 8030/HSPV 803 Building Technology and Pathology: An advanced lecture course that focuses on the physical properties of modern building materials, mechanisms of failure, and alternatives for conservation interventions. [Course was titled Advanced Materials & Methods prior to Fall of 2014]
- (Spring 2013, 2014, 2015, 2016, 2017, 2018, 2019, 2021) HP 8050/HSPV 805 Preservation Studio: A studio course developing preservation projects. Course content stresses documentation, critical evaluation and application of design and preservation strategies to cases in Charleston and its environs. Proposing design along a main commercial corridor that follows a preservation ethic toward contextualism, cultural landscape interventions, design theory and skills, and measured drawings are implemented and addressed.

(Fall 2013) HP 8090/HSPV 890 Adaptive Use: Project Design + Incentives: This project-based course revolves around the production of an adaptive use space-planning scheme. Students will develop creative, logical processes to propose a reuse scheme consistent with real-world constraints.

(Fall 2012, 2013, 2014, 2015, 2016, 2017, 2018, 2019, 2020, 2021, 2022) HP 8190/HSPV 819 Investigation, Documentation, and Conservation: The integration of multiple preservation skills by creating a professionally presented documentation and analysis project. The course prepares students to read and record the material fabric of historic buildings and landscapes and provides a platform for field experience in architectural descriptions, photography, measured drawings, and landscapes. [Course taught as a team with Carter Hudgins, Frances Ford and Kristopher King.]

(Fall 2016) HP 8250/HSPV 825 Sustainability & Historic Preservation: This is a seminar course discussing the sustainability movement as intricately tied to historic preservation. History is examined through the evolution of policy and building science. Course work investigates foundational theories from the sustainability field and emphasizes the multi-faceted movement's existing and potential for interface with the discipline of preservation.

(Fall 2015, Spring 2017, 2019) HP 8260/HSPV Historic Structures Report: This project-based course will take students through the process of generating a Historic Structures Report [HSR]. HSRs are one of the significant works that preservationists (and relevant consultants) produce to document a building. Students will undertake research, documentation and architectural investigation to comprehensively document and analyze the case-study buildings and landscape.

(Spring 2022) HP 8920/HSPV 892 Special Topics- Advanced Instrumentation in Building Pathology, Drayton Hall's Great Hall Ceiling. A grant funded project and class by the National Center for Preservation Technology and Training (NCPTT), where students will contribute to the research into advanced methods for testing (and predicting failure) in historic plaster ceilings by working in collaboration with The Warren Lasch Conservation Center and Drayton Hall.

(Spring 2017, Fall 2018, Spring 2021) HP 8920/HSPV 892 Digital Tools for Historic Preservation: This course offers immersion in digital approaches to documentation in Historic Preservation and Architectural History. The course takes a module-based approach, training students in emerging recording technologies and asks them to think critically about their strengths, weaknesses, and appropriate application.

(Fall 2017) HP 8920/HSPV 892 Mitigation in Historic Preservation: This is a seminar course discussing how to conceptualize and practice preservation when less-than-ideal circumstances surround a historic resource. Course content looks first at the forces which lead to a mitigation approach for preservation projects, then explores mitigation practices. The final portion of the class applies this understanding to a case study project- a 'triage project.'

(Fall 2019) HP 8920/HSPV 892 The Revolving Fund: Made possible by a subaward of a grant from Roger Williams University with the funding source of 1772 Foundation, this course examined the revolving fund as a financing tool for historic preservation efforts at Historic Charleston Foundation, the nonprofit with the oldest revolving fund in the United States. Students were able to learn about market conditions and the challenges facing organizations in RI, VA and NC which administer revolving funds through research and site visits to interact with these organizations.

(Fall 2020, 2021) HP 8920/HSPV 892 Paying for Preservation: This elective course gives students exposure to the dollars-side of historic preservation. Students hear from panelists and guest presenters on topics of how to get paid to do preservation work, nonprofit management, grant writing, tax credits and other methods of assisting with financing historic preservation products, and learn also about how 'preservation pays' by reading and understanding one of the main preservation economists, Donovan Rypkema.
